Abstract: Patient was a 40-year-old woman who complained of an atypical oral and maxillofacial pain (AOMP) caused by pericoronitis after extraction. The patient was diagnosed as both the deficiency of vital energy (qi-kyo) and blood circulatory function (ketsu-kyo), and the feeling of coldness by the kampo diagnosis. A combined treatment with hochuekkito (TJ-41) and tokishakuyakusan (TJ-23) was applied to the patient. Before the treatment, Visual Analogue Scale (VAS) of the pain score indicated 100 points. Ten months after the treatment, VAS indicated 60 point. Twenty four months later, VAS indicated 45 points. In parallel with the decrease in the pain, qi-kyo, ketsu-kyo and the feeling of coldness were also improved.

Key words: atypical oral and maxillofacial pain, deficiency of qi and ketsu, feeling of coldness, hochuekkito, tokishakuyakusan
